The Voices Project

Position: District Programme Lead, Women's Leadership and Governance
Location: Select districts of Jharkhand & Madhya Pradesh
Duration: 15-months (with possibility of extension based on performance)

ABOUT THE PROJECT

The 73rd Constitutional Amendment has significantly increased women's representation in local governance. Challenges remain in translating this representation into real authority, with the persistence of practices such as sarpanchpati or pradhanpati—where male relatives exercise power on behalf of elected women representatives—and has issued advisories and launched capacity-building programmes for Elected Women Representatives (EWRs) to address this issue. These efforts reflect an ongoing need to strengthen women's autonomy and leadership within Panchayati Raj Institutions, where authority continues, in many cases, to be informally dominated by men, limiting women's full and independent participation in local governance.

The Voices Project is a collaborative initiative of Transform Rural India Foundation, Stanford University, and IIT Gandhinagar, that aims to bridge the critical gap between women's representation in Panchayats, and improvements in the lives and well-being of women citizens. The project broadly envisages working closely with elected women sarpanches and the women in their communities to: (a) improve public service provisioning and (b) strengthen the exercise of authority and agency by women sarpanches.
